This Month in Auto History: 1957 Mercury Mermaid

Sixty years ago this month, one of automotive history's most radical looking factory experimental vehicles appeared on the cover of Hot Rod magazine. The "Mermaid Merc" was unlike anything else ever conceived or designed up to that point, created by Bill Stroppe and other Mercury crew/team members for one reason—speed.

History in Motion

While old car photos hold a certain level of fascination, there's nothing like some old film footage to really make automotive history come alive. Check out this short film showing a shipment of Buicks being unloaded on August 1, 1928 at the New York Central Rail Road Freight yard on their way to New York's Broadway Garage.
